Chandigarh / 21st, June.

The Congress General Secretary, CWC Member, Sirsa MP and Former Union Minister Kumari Selja expressed concern over rising unemployment in Haryana, stating that the growing number of highly educated youth applying for low-skilled jobs reflects the failure of the state's employment policies.

Referring to a recent recruitment process at Lala Lajpat Rai University of Veterinary and Animal Sciences (LUVAS), Hisar, Kumari Selja said hundreds of candidates, including postgraduates and professionally qualified youth, reportedly applied for a sanitation worker's post for which the minimum qualification was only Class VIII. She said the development highlights the widening gap between educational attainment and employment opportunities in the state. "When candidates with degrees such as MA, B.Ed and M.Phil are compelled to compete for fourth-grade positions, it raises serious questions about the availability of suitable jobs for both highly educated and less-educated youth," she said.

Kumari Selja alleged that despite nearly two lakh vacancies in various government departments, recruitment processes continue to move slowly, leaving many young job-seekers uncertain about their future. She also criticized delays in recruitment examinations and appointments, saying prolonged waiting periods often affect candidates' careers and age eligibility. The Congress leader urged the Haryana government to publish an accurate account of vacant posts across departments, expedite recruitment drives and implement measures to generate meaningful employment opportunities. “The youth of Haryana need opportunities, not assurances,” she said.
